

Leap of Faith

Jack be nimble, Jack be quick, Jack jump onto a ledge from a ladder on a forklift and try not to break his neck.

OK, I'll be the first to admit my little poem isn't exactly music to the ears, but the moves this guy is making ain't exactly ballet either. Gosh, even if the ladder was pointed in the right direction, he'd still be a safety nightmare. What goes through the mind of a person that puts himself in this sort of predicament?

Well, chances are good that his thoughts weren't focused on the hazards of what he was doing. Folks, before you go off and do something foolish like this, apply Operational Risk Management to the process. If you determine that your chances of ending up in a morgue are high, find a different way of doing business (preferably the right way).
